body of poor murdered Annie Goodwin. The victim's body will reach its final resting place to-day. Undertaker Kipp's establishment at 136 First avenue, was an object of curiosity during the morning.

People seemed to find a grim satisfaction is looking at the hermetically sealed casket which rested on two saw horses. Many came in and begged for a look at the dead girl's face, and they looked as though they thought that the undertaker was lying when he told them that the features were unrecognizable.

The poor body inside the casket, after being joited about in life and in death, will be taken to Woodlawn this afternoon by the family. There it will rest forever.

Meanwhile, Coroner Messemer and twelve of his fellow-citizens are seeking out the evidence by which the cruel death of the girl can be avenged.

The interest that has been taken in Annie Goodwin's case by the public is extraordinary. Two hours before the time set by Coroner Messemer for the continuation of the inquest, men and women began to gather in the corridor and push and crowd in their efforts to get a good position near the door.

Yet the prisoners have attained such widespread notoriety that every one wants a glimpse of them. Perhaps the rumors of sensational testimony and the prospect of a wrangle over the legality of the present proceedings may account for the interest, but this is barely possible.

LAWYERS SEGIN TO EARN THEIR PEES. As was expected, the first thing that happened after Coroner Messemer opened Court was the wrangle over the legality of the proceeding. It was red-hot.

Coroner Messemer first called Supt. Schuerer, of St. Michael's Cemetery Before the witness had a chance to take his seat, Lawyer Johnston, counsel for Merritt, the undertaker, arose and addressed the Court, but Judge Bedford interrupted him. 'Your Honor," he said, "I desire that point of the day. The Argentine revolution broke out very suddenly in Buenos Ayres Saturday morning, according to yesterday's despatches. The revolt followed the statements that all had become quiet again, after the reported conspiracy excitement which occurred earlier in the week.

Immediately after the revoit, which was begun by the Union Civica, assisted by two battalions of the garrison, President Celman declared the whole Republic in a state of stege, and the National Guard was called to arms. President Celman subsequently embarked from the Catalina Mole, taking refuge on board of a foreign ship. The Governor of Cordova, brother of the President, also escaped, but the Governor of Buenos Ayres was wounded.

They liberated Gen. Manuel J. Campos. who was awaiting trial as a conspirator and who placed himself at the head of the revolutionary party.
